Length of time employed in shelter

1) What reasons have Native women given for believing it was necessary to leave their home community in order to escape an abusive relationship?

7) Do you believe programs or services mandated to help Native women in their transition adequately assist these women? If not, what recommendations for change could you suggest?

2) What obstacles do you see Native women encounter in the transition from the rural community to an urban environment?

3) Are there any problems that you are aware of that a Native woman moving into the urban centre would encounter, more frequently, than do women of other ethnic backgrounds?

5) How successful are those Native women who must make the transition from the rural community to an urban environment in stabilizing their lives?

4) Are you aware of any differences in lifestyle (ie: attitudes ...) between the Native and non-Native women entering the shelter that affect a Native woman's success rate in making the transition?

6) Are there things that Native women sometimes do that makes it more difficult to help them compared to other women? Or maybe things they don't do that other women often do?

8) Are you aware of the problems children have in adjusting to the urban environment?

Enclosed is a copy of Lorraine Courtrille's paper on the use of shelters by Abused Aboriginal Women in Alberta. Barbara Roberts asked me to send it to you in late January or early February, and I lost your address before I found a large enough envelope...I am sorry!

It is not as strong as I would like it to be; the researcher was an undergraduate working on a Sec/State grant. However, it does raise some of the issues and there is not a lot of work available in the area.

Abused Aboriginal Women in Alberta: The Story of Two Types of Victimization, by Lorraine Courtrille.

This book studies the obstacles faced by Aboriginal women who make the decision to leave their communities and move to urban centres to escape abusive spouses. Courtrille emphasizes that Aboriginal women are first victimized by their spouses, then by urban support services which do not realize the specific cultural needs of Native women and children. The author concludes with a number of recommendations. Copies are $10 each. Contact:
